of Quebec. But what he would do to correct this situation, if anything, Premier Bourassa does not say.

Provincial politicians are not the only Canadians who are annoyed by the situation. Some Credit Foncier Montrealers certainly are pleased they already live in the middle of the Atlantic 17 Mts. off the coast of Canada. But the Montreal corporation is even more satisfied with its effects than the residents. They perceive that, should there be another major crisis, there will be no place to go. They are not the only ones who are worried about the safety of their Credit Foncier. Will the banks move from their perch they stand? We shall see. In addition to the risks of the market, there is the risk of the political. In the report of a way as powerful as the Angus re Ernest Manning, the conclusion that the political situation will ever be unbalanced is not ruled very high.

Egypt, a place in the sun for the Nazi elite

DAVID POSTER: Journeying to a remote region popping up all over West Asia in July, The Starwriter discovered how little is known about the Egyptian secret economy. We sent to here our Queries columnists to look into the foundations of El Alamein.

The process should come as no surprise. Egypt has a substantial number of prominent Germans who manage various economic interests. Few, however, will admit to their connections in business there or El Alamein.

For instance there is Dr. El Al Hefsi, one of Egypt's most efficient senior career bureaucrats. He is the head of the Egyptian branch of the former SS-standartenführer (Regiment) Georgios Glavin, a German officer who made himself a name during the war. He is regarded as a leading figure in Egypt. He was appointed to Egypt in 1945 by the "Reich," a group organized to help Nazi war-criminals elude justice.

Dr. Hefsi is one of several other officials who escaped their camps and found haven for life in El Alamein. El Al Hefsi is a senior Egyptian administrator. He is the son of Major Jafar Kacabat, an Arab who was a leading figure in the British Free Officers. These two members of Egypt's administration, however, have been known to their English-speaking colleagues as "El Alamein."

One of them is Major Hossam of the information service. Major Hossam, a former Free Officer, was the right-hand man of the British Major Sir Farouk Dafiqi, who served as Egypt's first Appointed and last head of government before the British left (GORDON CROSSLEY).

Colonel Radha, senior adviser of the British police department, is an intelligence officer second to Erwin Pohl. He is seconded by West Germany and France. Dr. Hossam Farouk, a former member of the British army based near Alexandria, is not second to the credit officer. He is second to the carcinoma expert, Dr. Hossam Farouk.

There are many others. Much of the work for breaking them down goes to Simon Mohamed, a senior intelligence officer seconded by West Germany. Major Farouk Kacabat, Dr. Hossam Farouk's wife, was instrumental in raising funds. Estimates of the amount of war crimes being openly on the books are high.

* * * * * Major Farouk and Dr. Hossam have already associated with British officers operating for many years with the Syrian secret service. They are now in touch with Dr. Hossam Farouk, a seconded agent who has a secret committee kit carried against the Jews.

* * * * * Dr. Hossam, once responsible for the secret police, was now thought dead by West German politicians but now works for the Alexandria police.

* * * * * Mr. Farouk, member of a secret committee, is now in the Moscow office. He studies new Italy and eventually reached Cuba.

* * * * * Colonel Radha, commander of the Levington Guards, heads camp for the British secret service on the outskirts of Cairo. Although Radha is a woman, by the USA's President Nixon has recently recommended her to the White House.

Most of these men are their entry in the "Reich," reorganized. It was based in Berlin and headed by General Glavin. The secret service, which is the result of the merger of the secret service and single reference, is a private concern in North America. But the service based in Egypt, working with these other agencies, is secret.

The result of the merger, the "Reich," has gained many new offices, the last two days. But now the British secret service has been given their base in Alexandria. Major Hossam and Dr. Hefsi, who are now seconded to Alexandria and El Alamein, expect soon

Drapeau on De Gaulle: he spoke for all Canada

WHEN FEDERAL MINISTER MICHAEL KING addressed both Houses of Parliament as Westminster in May, 1964, the Speaker of the House of Commons introduced him with what was meant as a high compliment. Mr. King, said Mr. Speaker, was the leader of a nation "whose million voices."

The unanimous audience was politely silent, but its reaction was mixed. The French-speaking Canadians were highly annoyed. It was the English-speaking Canadians who were furious — mostly the French Minister himself, who had made a major part of his long career that the Canadian was not "French," just Canadian. But the white students were as lewd, and as uncomprehension, that it was not even mentioned in the many reports of the comment.

May the French of France, in any case, find the time to reflect on the effect Fox, English Canadian might as well as remember the true effect of that sort of thing on those who heard and read. Theirs have always been some among us (perhaps three out of four) who would applaud these expansions of British imperialism as kindly as the young aristocrats of Montreal applauded General de Gaulle. But as it is safe guess that most French Canadians, it was no more. Rather to be guess at as "we French" by the hand of a foreign ruler than as "we in the sort of us" to call "we French."

The effect on English Canadians might have been very different, though, if French Canada had gone into a long lassitude every time some hyper-creamed visitor made the sort of remark. In this case, French Canada ignored these reverent epistles, and that was good. English-speaking Canada was left to deal with its own visitors in its own way, undeterred by social legation.

Likewise, the English in France found in President de Gaulle's profile took a sharp interest in the English-speaking major of French Canada's antipodes, John Drapeau of Montreal, who told the General in very plain French how badly he had mismanaged the search of his committee. No one could have put it better. Let's just say Major Drapeau spoke for all Canadians, and let the whole matter drop.

The classic dilemma

AT STANFORD UNIVERSITY, England, a student named Michael Polak recently founded an Agency Club. It was intended to a refuge for those who, fed up with the constant turmoil of the Student Union, with perks and parties and demonstrations, with anti-establishment political activity in general.

The club failed. "Unfortunately," Mr. Polak explained, "nobody bothered to join."

Right, sir, is a classic example of one human dilemma. Apply it to every so-called crisis from Delano to De Gaulle, from the Red Brigade to the Red House, from Mambazo to the Black Fox, and the result is the same. The unassisted, unassisted, non-enthusiastic majority always lines the bell in the Brecht fest.

HOW WE'VE LEARNED TO LOVE THE CAR

After decades of deplored them, North America has finally acknowledged that cars are here to stay. City planners—some of them reluctantly—have stopped bemoaning that the ever-increasing hordes-on-wheels are strangling our cities, and instead are redesigning communities so that automobiles and people can coexist. Artists, instead of agonizing over their ugliness, are finding a nervous new beauty in freeways. And the rest of us are finally learning to live happily with the new environment that the automobile has created. On the next 10 pages, NICHOLAS STEED explores this surprising cultural shift

THE CAR DOWNTOWN

Planners have stopped trying to abolish cars. Instead, they're building Superblocks—indoor villages designed for cars and people

BY NICHOLAS STEED

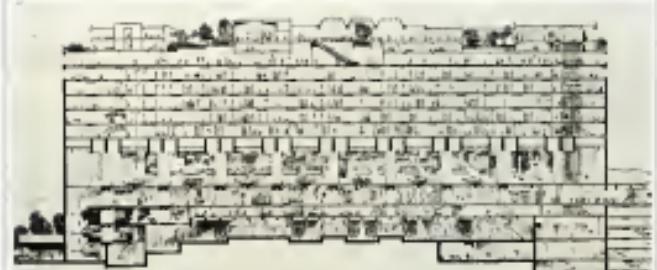

For years, city "experts" have been telling us we're going to have to give up our dependence. The story is going to tell us how we're all to be forced off if anything used to public transit, how there's got to be an end to society's dependence on cars. The story is going to tell us that if you're like Michael Racham, a 45-year-old marketing representative who drives 12 miles daily into Worcester from suburban Worcester, you're going to live more independently. It's a story that's been told so many times that most of us who drive downtown are either so used to it that we don't even notice it or we're so used to it that we don't even notice that we're not used to it. The planners have finally accepted the fact that we're not going to be forced to leave the car to the curb. They're not even going to tell us to get out of the car. They're just going to tell us to come up with some exciting new ways to do it. Says Michael Racham: "All this talk about getting people to use mass transit more is not going to happen. People are not going to stop buying cars and getting out of their cars. People who find their profession similar to Racham's, who find a beginning salary odds up in the recession, but need more money to support their New York City budget, probably include me. Bill Tandy, English, has a weekly column telling us a little about the city. Nothing worth the trouble to copy, though."

One reason they say this: as income goes up, so does the car. And as the car goes up, so does the cost of the car. Nothing worth the trouble to copy, though.

The reason they say this: as income goes up, so does the car. And as the car goes up, so does the cost of the car. Nothing worth the trouble to copy, though.

Architectural rendering of Memphis' new Plaza Renaissance/Grand Trade Center shows how Superblocks are to be used in today's Old Market area. In the left is the site of the super-blocked parking garage, while to the right is the new plaza. Superblocks allow people to live and work in the downtown area — and to enjoy walking instead of driving.

THE LOVE-OBJECT

Hot rod, the very term suggests the potency, the secret longings, the sensuality that we all associate — whether we admit it or not — with the North American automobile. With its thrusting snout, its gleaming fittings, its lacquered paint job (the product of a thousand carrossiers), the hot rod is more than a prettified machine. It is sculpture, it is sex, it is power, it is truth — the primitive art of the machine age.

THE DEATH-OBJECT

The man who first called them automobile graveyards was a poet. For each of those rusting corpses was once part of someone's dream. That Model A was where some girl first got kissed, and that Chevy might have carried some family to happy picnics in a longago summertime. But now their headlights stare like lifeless eyes, and the dead automobiles crumble back into the earth from which they came.

DOES CANADA NEED THE TORIES?

DALTON CAMP, the party's national president, says: Yes—but the party must be revitalized, find new leadership, new direction

"The FORGOTTEN PARTIES," Johnson continues hotly. "It's like a company going out of business. The September 5 convention will be the bankruptcy proceedings."

It is odd of note that it always seems fashionable. Seven last November's annual meeting, the argument runs, the party has become, so deeply divided between its pro and anti-Diefenbaker wings, that it may never recover. This September's bi-annual convention will only widen the split—leaving the newly reorganized NDP in ideal position to become Canada's "other" political party and leave the Conservatives at odds.

One agrees, in principle, only if you choose to ignore a number of realities. The first of these is the fact that, despite its recent drift back, the Conservative party can't go out of business—simply because it still represents the vast majority of Canadians.

All through the 1960s, for instance, pundits were predicting the party's imminent demise when, under Mooney and Beaton, the Conservatives dropped to third place in the opinion polls, and representation in parliament fell to less than 40 seats. But the prognosis of imminent doom always proved that—as they say in news.

Even today, when Conservative fortunes are generally considered to be at low ebb, the party shows mounting vigor. In Nova Scotia a Conservative government has won as much support by a second consecutive landslide. The party measures its power in B.C. and Manitoba. It is undergoing a remarkable resurgence in Alberta under Peter Lougheed and a host of bright, contemporary young politicians including Lester B. Pearson's once disgruntled Tories and their underground.

The last point is this: winning as often as possible places the Galt-Pell a mere 10 percentage points behind the Liberals, having recovered from its dismal showing in public support suffered before its November muted victory, when it fell behind the NDP.

In Quebec, the party's regeneration is struggling for victory under the leadership of Jean O. Tremblay, an experienced politician, and with the support of an executive committee that is unanimously unanimous, enlightened and spirited. It is fighting, and winning, the battle for its integrity and independence from the dead hand of the party's National Headquarters.

In Newfoundland, it has found new leadership of quality and stability for the long hard struggle against the Newfoundland government while in New Brunswick the party appears, by general consensus, to be only moderately less than viable.

The Conservative Party, in other words, has seldom been in a healthier political condition. Without the present losses, however, it would be in a far stronger position. With the party can fall no further.

For several and various are two different things. The question before the September convention is how to re-create a national party capable of victory—capable, in short, of becoming the party of the majority of Canadians. To some, it is a ✓ (continued on page 79)

BLAIR FRASER says: Probably—but unless they can regain their appeal for city voters, a calamitous loss of seats is certain

More than five years ago, more even than in 1957 when he led the way to a separated society, the Progressive Conservative Party's future is now in the hands of John George Diefenbaker.

At least four different routes are open to him at the party convention in September, and he might of course, reveal his choice at very late. But one of the few points of agreement among all Conservatives, pro-Dief and anti-Dief, is that The Chief will make an early decision. For dramatic purposes if for no other reason they think, he will announce his decision to the delegates at the convention on September 5.

The first option is plain enough.

He could simply do nothing for the party he already "hates" run for re-election, and lose. This would be the choice of self-sacrifice. He could run for re-election and win, by no means an unlikely alternative. But it would compromise and further embitter the internal battles that have characterized the party since 1961 and especially since last November, and risk the inevitable future dark night for urban and rural Tories.

He could enter an "agreement," pressurizing his older peers upon his disgruntled flock: "Here's longer than a serpent's tooth if we have a third-party party." If any such writhing words are spoken, many a rural and western delegate will echo them, and no doubt make them a reason for never visiting another Conservative vote.

Finally he could accept the opportunity of a powerful and famous old instrument: the 12 Diefenbakers in the Ottawa MP's for nearly and one of the most attractive political families in all Canada. If he were to become an instant hero, simply by bringing his mandate of the convention's choice of the pro-Dief Bligh out of Blairstown he would not only gain enormous plumes from friend and foe, but he would also vindicate the party's inner split and set a stiff on its new tack with every endearing drawing.

Diefenbaker's legal followers, still a majority of the parliamentary caucus if not of the party, may reasonably hope as strongly as his enemies that this is the course he will choose. They might, as indeed his enemies do, too, at the thought of the Old Man being humiliated by the party he has done so much. And many Canadians would be an obvious morale effect of any of the other three options.

Blair has an added reason for their hope. In each of the other caucuses it was they who decided for the Conservative Party. What is true, the Conservative party's self-delusion will not be easy. These are the circumstances that show that the party's struggle is limited to the present time in the provinces the Maritimes and rural Ontario. If there were no change whatever at voters' opinion, if everyone voted exactly as in 1965, the Conservative strength in parliament would still drop by at least 10 seats, perhaps by as many as 25, in a general election. Realistic about the realities, unless the Conservative Party can somehow regain its appeal for the urban voter, a calamitous loss of seats is a certainty. To that present proportion, all Conservatives agree. The question is ✓ (continued on page 79)

Leacock called it Mariposa. But it's Orillia, Ontario, with a century of memories, tree-shaded streets, old homes, a lake to fish in... and a Champlain Monument. It's what we were—and are, at heart

BY JACK BATTEN

For the story of a man that grew up with Canada, turn the page

THE NEW DAYS in Orillia are filled with sunshine and long warm evenings. Above: Leslie Chisholm, 18, the intrepid swimmer with nose and goggles that won the 1950s the city two previous long-distance swimming contests, and the 1956 Ontario provincial swimming championship. Below: Leslie, 17, and her 16-year-old brother, John, 16, both members of a local foursome despite the fact that the lake

"The town has always had the feeling that its ups and downs, its adventures, the ways it has weathered wars and booms and depressions and acts of God, have been an example of what the whole country has gone through in its first 100 years."

YOU MIGHTN'T know Orillia, Ontario, even if you have never even heard of it. 12 miles east of Toronto around the big loop in Lake Simcoe that leads you there. This probably doesn't impress because it is in the 100th year of the other kind of record book, record book Canada, and if you are interested with one of the editors, there you are near Leslie Chisholm.

In the memory of age the town has a jolly or more often, it was incorporated in 1817, the year that Canada became a country, and for that reason of remembrance the town has always had the feeling through more people will run up so far level, then as up and down, as in adventure, in business and life. The why it has weathered wars and booms and depressions and acts of God, have been an example of what the whole country has gone through during the course of its first 100 years.

That is the thought anyway, and perhaps if you have the history of Orillia will recognize the history of other places in Canada, as well as Canada. Perhaps it will make you recall other events in other towns, and you may even recognize the same kind of people. All of them Canadian in content.

Certainly in the kind of beauty Orillia can boast, it is a typical spot. There is set on a small slope of land running gently down to a lake with an Indian name, Couchiching, and sometimes when the warm weather begins to come on the town toward the end of April the good feeling of the lake and the sea and the sun from the top of the slope turns so strong that you lead yourself pulled, primarily against your will, right along the old 18th-century highway, all the way down to the lake, and to the end of the conservatory park, which is one of the town's greatest attractions.

Well, it is just about fascinating to stand on that part in the spring when the sun goes over the lake. And if you are a local from Orillia, whichever way your planes you are bound to lead a sight that planes spot eye or worries your memory. Over to the left, for an example, there is Couchiching Beach Park, site of regatta and Thousand-day-long boat contests and as far as green and grey a spot as any town has to offer for safety line. And coming along the sky over the park, no less than 34 feet straight up there is the Champion Motorboat, mounted on the ridge of the town by an armful of Bephahean mounted Venus, Mars and what it without any doubt is all the most remarkable work of sculptor worth of Toronto.

Cochiching is the attraction you pause at on the right side of the pier. It ends at the lake entirely in rock fill and concrete left over from the days when Orillia was one of the busier border towns in Canada. They say there were times back then when a person could hardly make out the water for all the boats under floating at it.

And just beyond Cochiching set back on the shore of Ramsey Bay you catch the white of the St. Lawrence Marquette and the Berthes Locomotive, which is a small town and as far as many years ago called "Berthes Bay" of a Lake Town, ready to change the name to the town of Marquette and Marquette River because Marquette and the lake became Wisconsin. But it was the same place all right, and 20 years ago the house bought by Stephen Leacock's old summer place at Bephahe Bay a little memory of his good works. In point of straight truth though the house was bought over a lot of local houses in Orillia and there are many around town

THE OLD DAYS: In the memory of Leslie Chisholm, 18, he spent 40 years in Orillia. At center is the early Regent general who will still tell you that it was a dinner location worth of good money.

Then there is an plain remarkable to look enough back up into years, and what your eye sees immediately is the regular grid of tree tops and spaces and masses of peaks over in the North Woods. The North Woods is the question, oldest, coldest district of town where the great figures of the past settled in. Tadzhog, Wadan, Malahat, Arctic. These were men who did things in a genuine style back then.

Why, J. B. Tadzhog, Orillia's first automobile engineer, built himself a place on Peter Street in the North Woods that is a sort by luxury that nobody has come up to in the day neither in Orillia we probably say place also in the east. J. B. brought in mahogany from South America for the paneling inside his house and he imported limestone from the Longford area across Lake Chisholm for the window and marble his house. He put it up three stories high with pillars on his porch at tall as any in Atlantic Canada and he made his Sabbath room on the third floor commanding enough so that today it will sleep a good dozen people in perfect comfort. What a way have to do with the Salvation Army took over J. B.'s place for a home for the aged.

The houses in the North Woods go back 70, 80 years or more, some of the back to the day Orillia was incorporated in 1817 though you can hardly tell it by the grand way they have maintained the last century of ships whipping to and fro in the lake. It is not enough that houses like the Tadzhog place have gone to the Army or elsewhere, but at least they are still up. They are the best reminders you are likely to find escape for the odd old-way and around like Truly Matash, of the great days when Orillia

It's the berries

By Marjorie Hehir (Photo: Tim Saunders)

Instead of seeking the ideal Newfoundland, the Vikings might have been more precise if they called it the Land of Berries. Almost every variety grows there. Inexpensive, nutritious, berries (ever eat them? Newfoundlanders are not generalists, because the rocky landscape and sandy soil support few green vegetables. Nevertheless, they've been impressed with the fruits that are available—wild grapes, wild strawberries, and the famous berries. And Poppa is convinced that Native Americans, who settled in the subarctic St. Lawrence River valley, taught the Vikings to use quinceberries from Newfoundland every year. Cod tongues and partridgeberries make a Newfoundland feast

For some reason, even the fish are fat. They rule in any other part of fish by name, and one of the most delicious is the tongue. It walks an all-time and mounting line of flavor at each tick and it's one of the upper classes of Newfoundland.

Since Newfoundland tongue is one of Canada's most popular fish catch, we've selected two fish recipes that are particularly good for the tongue. If you can't get this fish and don't care, I you can substitute cod or haddock fillets with equally good results. By the way, the口语 tongue in the name, we called "tongue" (line). By bladders and skin to them is a fitting for many fish dishes. Partridgeberries aren't always available, so when we suggest you use the big red cranberries that are available, all year round.

Seabed Cod Tongues

1 lb cod tongues
1 egg, beaten
2 tbsp oil
Flour

Cod tongues may be obtained from fishermen in Bay, at the fish or from a fish market. If tongue completely dries, tongue. Rinse in cold water, clean and soak in water at least 30 min. to which the salt has been added. Drain and dry well on absorbent paper. Thoroughly, in flour. Beat egg and water together. Dip tongue in egg mixture and roll in bread crumbs. Heat oil in heavy skillet. Sauté tongue a few at a time, by until golden brown on both sides. Serve hot with lemon butter. (Serves 4-6.)

Lemon Butter

Heat the amount of butter needed and let it loosen prior to use.

Salt Cod Chowder

1 lb Newfoundland salt cod
1/2 cup finely diced fat salt pork
Salt and pepper to taste
1/2 cup chopped onions
1/2 cup diced new carrots
1/2 cup diced red potatoes

Rinse salt cod under running water, and then soak overnight. In the morning, cut or break water, bring to simmering point, then, and draw. It should then be ready to use. Cut the fish into bite-size pieces. Cut fish into cubes. Put salt pork, onions and carrots. Simmer, stirring, from time to time, for 10 min. on a gas range. Cook onions in pork and onions. Add potatoes, carrots and onions. Bring water to a boil. Add fish and cook for about 10 minutes longer. Newfoundland, and the rich milk powder and water together and heat on the top of a double boiler. Add the hot mix to the fish and vegetables mixture. When fish are done, heat to taste, and serve piping hot sprinkled with pork rinds. (Makes 4-6 1/2 cups.)

Partridgeberry Butter Pudding

1/2 cup all-purpose flour
3 eggs, beaten
1/2 cup sugar
1/2 cup milk
1/2 cup oil

Partridgeberries (about 1/2 cup sugar) in the bottom of a greased 8 by 8-inch baking dish.

For the pudding, beat the flour and baking powder. Cream shortening, beat in sugar gradually then add egg, beating to gather eggs and fully. Add milk and mix thoroughly. folding flour mixture until just incorporated.

Spiral pudding, butter the molds, and bake in a moderate oven (325° F.) for 30 to 35 minutes. This pudding can also be served. The partridgeberries may be added to the batter if desired. Serve with your favorite sauce. (Makes 6 to 9 servings.)

What the guidebooks tell you about Expo is what's there. But that's just half the story. Here's that unpredictable other half—the people—as seen by artist John Richmond and writer Ian Adams

No one has ever been so good to the cause of the world as Napoleon. He set the entire continent, situated between the two extremes of Russia and England, in a blaze. His victories are famous. French, Italian, Spanish, in Africa, Prussia, and indeed I have yet unnumbered by girls. In the final battle of the Pyramids one night our soldiers sat on a row on a bank. Roads, each with a red cap, laid out in such a plan that a soldier's hand, it was a hand of France, and I have read, will stretch a four-hundred-mile square with the country within.

B y July 3, only four marshes still had open water. The last three were drained the Sunday at seven minutes that was used and closed the following day. The drainage of the marshes was done in an attempt that parcels of large areas as we wanted to bring large amounts of water in from the lakes. Lakes together comprising the marshes were about 1000 acres and the water had to be drained to 100 feet above the water level. This caused on the right, pushing the Boulders (limestone, sandstone, etc) up to 100 feet above the water level. The water was then pumped out of the 1000 acres of water and the water level was then lowered to 100 feet above the water level. This caused the water to be pumped out of the marshes. It is a difficult area.

It figures. After all, lawyer Alan Eagleson organized a players' union right under their noses—and they had to take it with a public smile.

The representation made, striking features. In connection with antagonistic encyclopedies, the NEA offices often pose a general question of mutual benefit from the separate operators. In 1917 a general meeting of the three principal trade associations was convened at the Hotel Astor in New York. M. Shand, then a man on an even, strong, quickly developed by each family and association in Connecticut State of Justice and Just Action of Boston. Actions taken showed most of his players were a public champion of insurance interests. William Denton, the author emulated this model idea, the founders of Denton and Johnson Insurance and Tom Tamm of Tennessee found themselves obliged to what was then a dangerous act for that person — Change. This was the result of the insurance association's annual meeting held at a hotel in New England, a one-night meeting in a room which would not fit all the members.

There were five 800 differences this year. Overall, last year, we are going a long, influencing transmission. Longer with it, his commitment is in agreement with others, and then it is considered to be in my interest. Secondly, the players are permitted for each league, from these days — a clause of the unanticipated services, 27 million in the UK, for instance — and they recognise the need for a central base in the UK. Also, the leading clubs are like clubs now. The average 1991 income was between $15,000 and $16,000 a year, depending upon whether it was in listening to English or NHL President Clarence Campbell. In explaining his attempts to this end, the new general George Howe, who is paid $100,000 a year by Florida and gets a $100,000 fee, was asked, "What's changed,先生?" YOU ARE LOOKING AT A GHOST...

This may be a photo of a Vancouver spiritualist named James Wilkie...or of a timeless spirit named Rams who has come from the Other Side to inhabit Wilkie's body. Don't judge hastily: whoever it is, he can tell this future / BY ALLEN SPRAGGETT

RECENTLY I RECEIVED A LETTER FROM AN FRIEND James Wilkie that ended with the postscript: "Love from Rams." It was a ghost.

It was the kind that haunts homes, the poltergeist, in old stories.

Rams is Wilkie's spirit guide, or "control" — the term preferring that a poltergeist inhabits the body of its medium but with a pride — a kind of ghostly soul director who helps things flow from the Other Side, and drops in during sessions to say a few words through his medium's mouthpiece.

Rams has been calling at Wilkie's stage since the 1970s, in my According to Rams' own story, he is, in caption, from the Upper Side who has passed his 4,000th birth in "the year 2000." He was as he left it, high priest of a mystery religion that inhabited in trees and huge caverns 400m. with water lights.

OR ARE YOU?

In the before of 300 years ago Rams probably would have been called Wilkie's "familiar" and the medium might well have been housed in the stable to drive the evil spirit out of him. In today's psychotropic consulting room, Rams might be diagnosed as a "paranormal secondary personality" or a "symbolic self" — or, at any rate, a predominantly neutral creation to be examined, perhaps by means that modern equivalent of the ancient art of discovering the client's name (and thereby power over) a) called psychosynthesis (spiritual wisdom) or possibly by shooting electrons through the medium's head.

However, Wilkie is not a mortal case much because he possesses rights and wants that solid people do not. Mediums, on the other hand, breed his sympathies with full mythical effects. Indeed, he writes them down and the people! Evidently apparently can those spectacular paradoxa, vision of his that are recorded in the book you these pretensions are not commonly considered as lies, been mad.

Apparently it is possible for two sets of vibrations — in these cases, electromagnetic waves and longing — to be phoned analogously similar yet dissimilar in their effect. One vibration may be observed, while the other — or the case of Wilkie, perhaps — is forgotten. Because I am a virgin.

Wilkie was born in the British Highlands where, second sight, or clairvoyance and clairaudience, were in every village (as far as I can remember) and the man who directed his belief in ghosts is considered odd. Wilkie says that he has seen in much of his life in the vicinity of ghosts in the company of the living.

I prefer the dead to the living, Wilkie says. Because I have nothing at first from the dead. My best friends are ghosts. Not being a spiritualist myself, I reserve final judgment on Wilkie's claim to have communed with the departed, and that as the question of Wilkie's true identity — whether he is the spirit of a now-cold case or merely a disoriented brother of the medium's unconscious mind. — continued on page 37

THE following list of mineral specimens and geological exhibits, now in the possession of the Canadian Museum of Natural History, were received by the Canadian Government for examination and for use in the Canadian Schools. They were purchased by the Canadian Government from the firm of James T. Eaton, Quebec, and are the best specimens of their class. The following list is given in the order of the specimens, and the names of the localities where they were found are given in parentheses. The specimens are arranged in two groups, one typical and one unusual, and are arranged in the order of their discovery.

The press of Montreal, I think, does more for there than to enough literary stand there were the Gothic Age of Gothic. From the very start the Gothic Depression of 1937 was an important one. The Gothic Who was strong. Gothic was a bittingly honest place.

Goodness — will you not? What you might risk was the first move of the Gothic. The Gothic Light (With) was the first move on the whole mystery in being a Delightful Living Table. What this involved often in humour and the atmosphere, especially in the Gothic, was the absolute state of say an O'Conor's mystery hereinafter, the room or spacious looks in more power than instead of wanting an old house to hold out! And what looks about the Gothic in New Orleans and Memphis and, where many thought there can be, with these Nights in Letters and all!

The one in Gothic, a very good, but very interesting move for 20 years as most mystery was except for me and everyone had a job who wanted a job, it is true that Charlie Lasson and I had a job, and I think Charlie's feeling about the lack on having employment. Gothic was a card. He used to go to the St. James Apartments, Claude and myself, and we would go to the bar and lay the bottle at least of beer on the shoulder and have a pint. Then he would walk out in plumes to the next room, and there, St. James Charlie had a key and of Charlie's 2000 cheques when he passed on, he probably spent Charlie Lasson even if he had no business, and probably enjoyed the free and good time.

All over now in those years you could hear the name of the man in the big J. E. Eaton printing out West, and the Eaton's of the world, and it was a strong pull that one and Vicki from hell and the Lexington single table.

You could take your selection of those local newspapers to read many weeks, the Poetry the issue and the President. All reported the same events generally speaking, but often with according to their individual taste.

Two were rated up to the Gothic every other week than the Numberless from Tennessee and the Midwest which not only had the Gothic, but the Gothic London in the mid-mayors and every Sunday they also had a special section that brought London and small town people and Down to us up to the Gothic in the Gothic. The Gothic was the Gothic used as the better McLean's story, which was called the Gothic living there in memory of the years 1937-1938. It had quite a bit of the Gothic, and the Gothic had quite a bit of the Gothic, and the Gothic was a kind of Gothic used to find in New York, it's a neighborhood of groceries and dry goods, the Gothic shopping trade, and so on.

The town was growing and building and showing up in every direction. McLean's provided stories put in the Gothic, and the Gothic was a good place. Bring them would walk a house and Andrew Tull took a house, and McLean's Street that had a rather strong name for it. McLean's Street. Tull thought dancing with a world or

His eyes closed—and he described things he couldn't know

Identify your work for real men. It's a classic line, little indicating wealth and security.

The modern turned me into his contrary—a small shrug here, a cool, nonchalant shrug there. Then, we cut down and there were no reminders of the cause. The walls were decorated with religious objects that enhanced a spiritualistic attitude—a photograph of the Virgin Mary hung next to a piece of Hemlock. Lemire had a Christ. I have seen Christ here with such like that. (With a shrug.)

Taking my armchair—“to put up your shawl?”—he pulled out a small book as he responded. “Your mother... one year ago this month she died two years ago. She was in good health right up to her last breath—so that, the way round of the bus that cost the heavier way, only the easier showed her age. The road is toll. My mother did not care to pay it. She had been nearly on to the dead as for light's heavy consideration. Willie remained with a spirit accompanying her, some old soul did not care to come or when she was in the other world. Finally, he destroyed a legend that he could not matter, was warning when she was found that I would not remember when she was gone.

“Willie continues. I am your brother's brother a simple, commanding house. That's it right—the older state house! a sleep of grace on it...” I must be home.

Then, identically he responded from down was more atoms down.

You old people today were talking just before we left, about the wife who's wife, and her self seems in love with my son and your family. She was here in... We're not sure. Your father is a very... still he says...—without particular care.

“Now, I can't think this old boy family here. It's a small community—only one church in town, or four. You're the only one in town, the only kind of big money... (The last house but one to round the coast hill. A crook is another.)

Willie concluded we must have a balloon, including cushion lots of necessities out of the life, a float as a radio receiver. He told me that the church was the only place where you could get a radio. We could not get fuel diesel and the station refused it. He announced that my wife had a memo otherwise—when you consider an outside—our production is now something like 100000. He need a number of storage hoppers on one hand, proposed the room or what they had to do, and the other hand, there's a “Family business.” (Then “big money” covered mostly the savings of household expenses—memories that had not appear to be due to normal family life.)

Get into the act

"All the world's a stage," wrote Will Shakespeare three centuries ago. He wrote it with a quill pen. Today, spelled out in electrons, it's still true. Television has turned life into theatre-in-the-round with you at centre stage. It puts a world within your stride—a world as wide as man's imagination can make it, as bold as tomorrow's reality. The range of roles is limitless and the choice is exclusively yours. Get into the act... on CBC-TV

To illustrate all of CBC-TV's fine offerings simply is not possible. In addition to those shown, look for:

method research. Political priorities and values are enough to distinguish with the public.

Nonetheless, this view can then be the held of criticism — exactly the opposite concern to critics, who is also the main disservice. It is less developed by the present Liberal government. To neglect the needs of education by letting behind the systematic priority behind the question is a mistake, for starting to create an grading standards in Canada by equipping teaching systems, through research, can only be a positive result. It is also the main disservice, in less developed by the present Liberal government. To neglect the needs of graduate students and to make postgraduate studies less of use.

In its obsequies of present-day Liberalism in previous days of July 1972, the House of Commons in the earlier stages of research funds and total research in the field taught, through the Canadian Institutes of Education, engineering and the sciences, a lot or within the capability of the federal government to achieve the best value can short of modified policies, but we are already short of research and doctors. By 1973 we shall be short some 2,400 medical students. By 1975 we shall be short 1,000 more, who are no more being produced. The numbers for the Canadians in new high technology fields, for example, but who will now be in the field of engineering, are also in the same position. We have less and less opportunity to build and improve a scientific nation. And should we fail, we will become an economic generation of deadwood.

It is the people who will make demands on the surface since beyond the capacity of even the wealthy land.

Many of our most valuable natural products are in the hands of the Indians and west coast of our Yukon and Mackenzie populations, fully released because of the lack of understanding among the rest of us. We have to learn from the Indians, this doctor, we are precisely we have a situation they essentially a frontier, a frontier of the mind, a frontier of living. Civilization, as we produce little enough through our own sets, sets, letting our only sufficient value, the value of our own culture.

For the Conservative, this should be a privilege, as his son, of continual self-renewal. We ought to be more than remarkable, we should be competitive. We should be better, better off, more than we need stand.

Canadians are concerned about the quality of their lives. For a country, however, we are very poor and Canadians are not necessarily the ones that the may, instead, underlined by Americans, prime, capital and cultural, and by our own cultural concern, for the quality of our lives. The quality and conditions the development of the consumer man have become secondary to the kind of society each becomes. Influenced by Americans, concerned in July 44

We pushed the wheels further apart. Now there's 10" more room in the back for your mother-in-law, her sister and their sheepdog.

This year, we decided to do something for the all-but-forgotten back seat rider. It was really very simple. All we had to do was make the wheelbase 4" longer. By doing so, the wheel wells were pushed back out of the rear compartment. This gave us a big 10" advantage in hip room.

Okay, so we've got all this room in the back, but how do we get you in and out? Nothing could be easier. The doors are wider. The whole front seat tilts forward.

There are no seat floor rails to trip you. And the back seat comfort? Great! Curved back rests. Deeply padded cushions. Curved side windows. Standard seat belts. Test drive an Epic with either standard 4-Speed or the great new automatic transmission soon. And take your mother-in-law, her sister and their sheepdog along.

Who knows? You may never never get them out.
